Historic Collection . . . Gold Amberina

The fires in Fenton's factory burn all day, every day, with a glorious warm glow - captured forever in Fenton's Gold Amberina. Each shape a masterpiece of design, changing from glowing yellow-orange tones to luscious red - the colors of the fire which created them - caught and frozen in time. The radiant color is achieved by layering two colors and controlling the thickness of each - quite a skill when working in molten glass.

One of the most collectible colors in the antique market, Amberina was developed by Joseph Locke at the New England Glass Company in 1883.

These fine Amberina collectibles by Fenton feature handpainted open seedpods tucked among ferns. Highlighted with 22k gold accents, this unique design is by Robin Spindler.

The handpainted floral developed by Kim Plauche' uses the icy greens which are commonly paired with violet in home decor.

Mother & Child Pendant

Jon Saffell has captured the special love between Mother and Child in the first pendant for Mother's Day. Margarita deSantis encircled the Misty Blue bas-relief piece in a simple chain so it would be equally appropriate with a dress or your best jeans. The chain is gold vermeil and the hand applied channel is heavily gold plated.

Martha Reynolds

With Martha's sandcarved floral, and this lovely bell's bead pattern, it becomes difficult to decide where the marigold iridescent spray stops and the 22k gold accents begin. A perfect decorative pattern for this bell shape, Martha's dimensional design should get rave reviews.

Spruce Carnival

In 1908 Fenton originated the first Carnival Glass in an attempt to capture the beauty of the expensive Tiffany Favrite and Steuben Aurene at popular prices. The method developed by F.L. Fenton, Jacob Rosenthal and Fenton glass workers did not depend on using precious metals in the glass batch but utilized a spray "dope" that applied a rainbow of colors on the surface of the glass. The American public fell instantly in love with this splashy new glassware. Green Carnival is one of the most collectible of the early iridescent colors.

Asked to design the perfect handpainted pattern to coordinate with Champagne Satin, Martha Reynolds created this beautiful and contemporary combination of colors. As a tribute to her skill, the pattern was named "Martha's Rose." Each piece is signed by the artist. The flowers are handpainted on a base glass of French Opalescent with rings and handles of Aquamarine - creating individual works of art for each lucky collector of this new color group.

Misty Blue Satin

Somewhere between clear blue sky and cool blue water hovers Misty Blue. Created using an opalescent glass which turns a soft white on the edges when fired. After each piece is made, it is allowed to cool slightly. It is then reheated before the finisher gives it the final flare or crimp. Reheating the cooled glass causes the edge to strike a fiery white.

Translucency and texture - two design elements that are predicted to be very important in the next few years to the designer and consumer. Fenton has captured it with its satin iridescent blue which reflects so many colors - purple, green, gold and pink.

Bellflowers

Clear icy blue is decorated to coordinate with Misty Blue Satin. The clean crisp look of clear water offsets the satin shimmer of Misty Blue adding a new texture and interest to the grouping. Designed by Martha Reynolds, each fresh Spring bouquet features tiny enameled beads for added depth.

A little history with a lot of function. The mould for this pretty accent piece was made by Northwood Glass Company in the early 1900's. Fenton acquired the mould from them in 1926. Great for trinkets, potpourri, bath beads or soaps.
