The Artistry of Fenton

Your new Fenton glassware was born in the fiery furnaces of our plant in Williamstown, West Virginia, and shaped by master craftsmen using techniques and tools that are reminiscent of the Middle Ages.

Each piece of Fenton glass is the result of the consummate talents of the master craftsmen who form sand, soda ash and lime into beautiful works of art for generations to enjoy.

At the heart of this age-old process is the Gatherer, who skillfully twists a fiery gob of molten glass on a seven-foot steel "punty," and the Blower, who with his breath helps shape the red-hot molten glass.

This Opalescent bowl, with its pearly highlights and delicate optic stripes, shows the famous Fenton ruffled or "crimped" edge, formed just before the pliable, hot glass cools into its final form.

Fenton artists add finishing touches of charm and color to the glass. Created by master decorators, the patterns are unmatched for their flair and individuality. Each hand-painted piece is proudly signed by its artist and then fired for permanence and lasting brilliance.

Using the designs from America's past, as well as new adaptations, our designers and chemists bring an exciting array of fashion colors to this age-old craft, assuring a continuing source of collectible, fine hand-made American glass.

We receive visitors daily to watch the magical process that transforms molten glass into treasured, heirloom pieces. We invite you to join us for a tour of Fenton Art Glass.

The Fenton Tradition

For more than 80 years the name Fenton has been synonymous with the highest quality art glass, bringing the pride and pleasure associated with these beautiful items to generations of discriminating Americans.

We of the Fenton family, who have owned and operated the company since its founding in 1905, are proud of this reputation as one of the nation's premiere producers of hand-crafted glassware. To the third generation family members now managing the business—and to our large “family” of loyal and highly skilled employees—each piece of glassware that we produce continues a tradition of quality, innovation and craftsmanship painstakingly built over the years.
