Handcrafted American Glass Artistry

A Century of Manufacturing Excellence

For nearly two centuries, the Ohio Valley has been the epicenter of America's top glass manufacturers. Cities large and small on both sides of the Ohio River have been home to factories which made the crystal and colored glassware for our nation's tables.

In the 1890s, two corporate conglomerates headquartered in Pittsburgh—the National Glass Company and the United States Glass Company—owned and operated most of the glass plants which produced decorative and utilitarian glassware in distinctive colors. During the first decade of the Twentieth Century, however, several individual entrepreneurs sought to found and operate independent glassmaking organizations.

One such entrepreneur was Frank Leslie Fenton. At age 25, he and two of his brothers formed the Fenton Art Glass Company. Within a short period, they were creating and designing innovative new products, such as "Iridescent Ware," that changed the direction of much of the glass tableware industry.

From 1905 until mid-1948, Frank L. Fenton was the driving force of our firm. When he passed away, his sons—Frank M. Fenton and Wilmer C. "Bill" Fenton—took control of the company. They were a great team, and their foresight and leadership, extending nearly four decades, firmly established Fenton's position as America's foremost manufacturer of handmade colored art glass.

Today, Fenton Art Glass continues to be family-owned and managed, as members of the third- and fourth-generations hold key positions at our plant near the Ohio River in Williamstown, West Virginia. These family members share a passion for glass and, in concert with the skills of many talented employees, look forward to the challenges of glass-making in 2007 and beyond.

Dear Fenton Customer,

On January 2, 1907, the Fenton Art Glass Company produced its first items in glass at our plant in Williamstown, West Virginia. My grandfather, Frank L. Fenton, and my great uncles John Fenton and Charles Fenton were then in charge of various aspects of the business. They were ably assisted by our first factory manager, Jacob Rosenthal, who had helped recruit a workforce of experienced, skilled glassworkers.

The talents and dedication of all of these persons marked the start of the traditions of excellence that are now so firmly associated with Fenton glass. As we developed our new products for 2007, all of us at Fenton Art Glass paused to reflect upon the efforts of those who began this enterprise as well as those who have sustained and nurtured it over the years. As always, every article of Fenton glass bespeaks our pride in the craftsmanship of the designers and skilled artisans who make these products possible.

Our Horizons and Studio collections for 2007 mark new directions for us, as we seek to adapt and change in keeping with emerging trends in a highly-competitive marketplace. We will continue to cherish the strong personal relationships and the appreciation for the beauty and value of our products that characterize the Fenton brand.

Studio FENTON

A bold new direction for Fenton Art Glass. Under the leadership of Dave Fetty, our team of talented artisans has revived hot glass decorative methods from the distant past and developed and mastered new techniques all their own. Each of these dramatic vases will be embossed with the personal stamp of Dave Fetty.

Myriad Mist

designed by Dave Fetty

Multi-colored glass frit is trapped between layers of French Opalescent glass. Blown to shape in a special mould called a "paste mould," this vase must be carefully reheated to shape the neck and to create the milky opalescence.

Monet's Garden

designed by Dave Fetty

An innovative technique captures the French Impressionist in today's art glass. An inner layer of light green glass is covered with Milk Glass and rolled through different colors of finely crushed glass. When the vase is reheated, gold ruby glass develops into random pink "flowers" that are sure to delight.

Fenton Carnival Glass: Yesterday and Today

In October 1907, the fledgling Fenton Art Glass Company entered the marketplace with an exciting new line of glassware. Called "Iridescent Ware," this new product featured vivid, changing metallic hues on a highly-patterned pressed glass articles. The glassware was popular from 1908 to about 1915, and Fenton's "Iridescent Ware" enjoyed great success, even being exported to many countries around the world.

By the 1950s, this glassware was being eagerly sought by American collectors. Stories abounded that the glass had been used for prizes in midway games, and the phrase "Carnival glass" was coined. Collector clubs were formed, and there has been great interest ever since. When Fenton resumed production of iridescent glass in 1970, we decided to call it "Carnival glass" and we have done so ever since.

The secret—both in 1907 and now—of Fenton Carnival glass is the special spray of metallic salts on the glass while it is very hot. Using today's technology, Fenton glass technologists have rediscovered the striking vivid effects of some of the sprays first used in 1907. We continue to make Carnival glass by hand, the "old-fashioned" way, and we never cease to marvel at the rainbow of colors and the interesting hues.

Fenton Art Glass is among the world's foremost producers of handmade colored art glass, and our Carnival glass is second to none. We regard the enthusiasm of today's collectors as a great tribute to company founder Frank L. Fenton, who first ventured into the marketplace with "Iridescent Ware" a century ago.

Ruby Opalescent

A recent addition to our palette of glass colors, this new hue is REALLY RED! Special ingredients in the glass batch are needed to make opalescent glass. During the production process, the molten glass must be briefly chilled and then reheated in order to create the opalescent effect. These two lamps are triumphs of the glassmaker's art.

At Fenton, we continue to make our glass the "old fashioned" way, by hand, using tools and techniques that are essentially unchanged from those of a century ago.

Nowhere else in America can one find the range of glassmaking skills that are used daily at Fenton Art Glass.

Working with molten glass at nearly 2000° F, these talented artisans work in teams to produce pressed and blown glassware in a wide range of shapes and colors.

Generations of Americans have welcomed Fenton glass into their homes or have presented Fenton products as gifts.

Upholding the traditions of one of America's oldest industries, Fenton glassworkers take great pride in their craftsmanship. They make glass the "old fashioned" way, by hand, using tools and techniques that have seen little change since Fenton Art Glass produced its first items in 1907.
